IMO Conference – Maritime Security and Facilitation

Day 2 – 15th September

The International Maritime Organization's special measures to enhance maritime security, as detailed in the SOLAS Convention and the ISPS Code which became mandatory on 1 July 2004, apply to ships involved in international trade and the port facilities serving them. Now 6 years on there have been many developments, this conference will look at the most recent updates and amendments to the code as well as looking at the future challenges that the maritime community now face, including the facilitation of maritime traffic, piracy, drugs, stowaways and the many other law enforcement challenges.

This conference will feature distinguished speakers from the IMO, EC, UK and US responsible for maritime security. It will also provide updates and advice on current regulations, guidance and tools on a range of port facility security and maritime law enforcement related issues from an EC, UK and US perspective.
